15-minute source-check activity

15-minute source-check activity

Illustrative teaching sample using fictional information. Not operational guidance or a record of a delivered session. Audience: up to 40 adults in five groups of eight. One facilitator leads; one logistical co-host manages rooms, chat and timing. No AI account, camera or personal information is required.

Before the clock starts, pre-assign the five rooms, label four pairs within each room, load the plain-text card and answer template, and check that the no-breakout route is available. If the platform cannot place participants promptly, use the plenary route rather than consuming the pair-work time.

Learner task and materials

Supply one short, fictional source card and one draft message. The card says: “Example Centre A opens at 09:00 on Friday. Step-free access is confirmed. The shuttle stop is not confirmed. Check the local authority’s live notice before any real journey.” The practice draft says: “Example Centre A opens at 08:00 Friday. A shuttle stops at the entrance. Everyone can use this route.” Both are synthetic; neither names a real site or is safe to circulate as public advice.

Each pair marks (1) a changed fact, (2) an unsupported claim, (3) a missing caution, and (4) a publish/review/stop decision with a human approver. The answer key flags 08:00 versus 09:00, the invented shuttle, omission of the live-notice check and the unsupported “everyone” assurance. The expected decision is stop publication, correct and verify with the responsible authority.

Run of show, 15 minutes

Minute	Action	Evidence of participation
0-1	Facilitator gives the fictional-data warning, objective and source/draft text; co-host posts the accessible text.	Everyone can read or hear the same card.
1-3	Five rooms open, eight people each. Within each room, participants form four pairs and annotate the card and draft.	Each pair records one mismatch and one decision.
3-5	Pairs compare in their room. Each room chooses one reporter and one checker; remaining learners may type corrections.	One concise room response, including an approver.

Minute	Action	Evidence of participation
5-8	Room reporters enter a four-cell response into the shared, no-login template; co-host relays typed answers if needed.	Five comparable responses are visible to facilitator.
8-12	Plenary: each reporter has at most 30 seconds. Facilitator contrasts an invented detail, a changed fact and a dropped warning; co-host keeps time.	Learners hear all five decisions; no claim of consensus is required.
12-14	Facilitator reveals the answer key and asks who must verify before a real message could be issued.	Learners name the responsible human reviewer and live source.
14-15	Each person writes one rule they will use next time: “Before sharing, I will ___.”	One-line transfer commitment, voluntarily submitted.

No-breakout route: Keep all 40 in plenary. Give two minutes for individual reading and pair discussion by nearby seat or private text exchange where feasible; otherwise use silent solo annotation. Co-host posts five numbered response rows, and the facilitator samples one answer per row before revealing the same key. No learner has to speak, use a camera or create an account.

Text-only/no-account route: Email or display a plain-text source card, draft and four numbered response fields. Participants reply in chat or on an editable local document; a co-host reads anonymous themes aloud. The answer key and one-line rule are supplied as text. If connectivity or the shared template fails, the facilitator runs the plenary route from the local copy. Avoid collecting names or real case details.
